POLO GROUNDS, Oct. 14 - The scene within the polo grounds as the first game of the world's base ball championship series began was one of intense animation. The vast crowd filled every available seat of the stadium and bleachers and overflowed to the remotest sections of the grounds, while further back, from housetops, galleries, telegraph poles and window ledges a fringe of excited enthuslasts thronged the field. Great crowds were still streaming through the gates as the men took their positions for the play. The police arrangements had been so well matured that there was comparatively fittle disorder. It was estimated that the crowd numbered upward of 50,000 people, and probably would reach 80,000.
